

Can you help dads have their say?

We have developed a short survey with our friends at the Fatherhood Institute to find out about dads experience of going to antenatal appointments, scans and being at the birth of their child.

We would really appreciate your help reaching dads who have had a child in the last 5 years, so they can have their voices heard.

With information we gather about maternity services in Scotland, we can provide NHS Scotland, policy makers and other health care practitioners with information to help them make the most of the energy and commitment of fathers-to-be before, during and after the births of their children.

We think the perinatal period is a crucial time for both mums and dads to get the support they need. We hope you can spare five minutes to share it among your networks, friends, family and work colleagues to help us make a difference to families across Scotland.

To make it easy we have created an advert you can use for Facebook and twitter just link the image directly to the survey which you can find HERE

The closing date is 31 May and the results will be published along side a huge review of evidence on the impact dads have at the time of birth which will be released in time for Father's Day on 17 June.

Thank you very much for your help.
