

It's time to come out for trans equality!

In November, the Scottish Government began its consultation on proposed changes to the Gender Recognition Act 2004. These changes will give trans people in Scotland the recognition and protection they need, and we've been campaigning hard for them alongside many other campaigners and organisations. If you believe in equality, then we need you to come out for trans people and help make these proposals a reality by responding to the consultation.

Not sure where to start?

Responding to the consultation can be easy and straight forward. The Equal Recognition Campaign have produced a handy guide to the consultation, outlining the questions that most relate to the campaign and suggesting some things you might want to cover in your response. It's a great guide that makes it quick and simple - Read it here!

Don't forget to share the campaign on Facebook, Twitter and other social media platforms – the more trans people and their allies make their voices heard, the stronger we are.

It's time we gave trans people the same rights everyone else has.

It's time we made a safer and fairer society.

It's time to come out for trans equality!
